Preparatory instruction - A separate, small VALO group of preparatory instruction in a few different schools. The group studies Finnish and various subjects, and classes in a few subjects are attended in a basic education class in a group according to their own age and skill level. Especially for newly arrived children and young people. Separate groups for lower elementary, upper elementary, and upper secondary school students. The teaching provides good skills for the transition to basic education, and the group already studies age-appropriate school subjects.

Inclusive preparatory instruction - The student studies in his / her own local school in his / her own age class and also receives preparatory instruction during or after the school day. Especially for immigrant children who have already been in Finland at an early stage of education and who already know Finnish. Inclusive preparatory instruction supports the student's language development and schooling during the first school year in the way and to the extent that the student needs it individually. Teaching provides a good foundation for starting school.

Joint education - Students who come to Finland in the middle of schooling receive preparatory education for one year. In the upper secondary school phase, it is possible to receive joint education support in one of Joensuu's upper secondary schools. The student studies in a basic education group according to his or her own age level and also in a small group for subjects that require higher language skills. He or she receives support for his or her learning with the support of both teaching Finnish as a second language and often also with a teacher or tutor in his or her own language. Joint education provides additional support for completing upper secondary for a student who has moved from another country.

Finnish as a Second Language- Teaching - Finnish as a Second Language and Literature (S2) is one of the subjects in the Language and Literature curriculum. According to the criteria of the basic education curriculum (2014), a student can study Finnish as a second language and literature if his or her mother tongue is not Finnish, Swedish or Sámi or he or she otherwise has a multilingual background. In accordance with the S2 curriculum, studies are also carried out if the student's proficiency in Finnish does not provide prerequisites for studying the Finnish language and literature curriculum.

Native language teaching- the teaching of a student's native language is supportive to pre-school and basic education as well as upper secondary education. Arranging and participating in the student's native language teaching is voluntary. In the teaching of the student's native language, co-operation is established between other subjects and the teaching supports the development of the pupil's multilingualism. Teaching is given two hours a week.
